

THINKING ABOUT THE END

1. When people talk about the end times, I think (select all that apply):

- People are always predicting the end of the world, so is it really something we should focus on?
 - The people I've seen who obsess on the end of the world are super weird, so what does that tell you?
 - I hope it's not too soon—there's so much I still need to do before the world ends.
 - Am I going to have to run for the hills? Will my phone even work out there?
 - Plague, war, famine, people trying to unite church and state—times are pretty troubling right now! Are we living near the end?

2. I imagine the last days will be like (select all that apply):

- Endless chaos, violence and destruction everywhere, people joining cults and false religions performing “signs and wonders.”
- How Jesus described the “days of Noah”—people living out their lives like normal, until suddenly, their world ends.
- One big “reality show.”
- Above all, a spiritual crisis, as you're forced to take a stand on whether to follow God or the self-centered crowd.

3. If there's anything I'm looking forward to about the end times, it's:

- Seeing the whole world reached with the gospel.
- Living totally by faith in Jesus.
- Finding out how much Adventists had “right” about the last days.
- Watching history unfold—and repeat itself.
- The clarity that a crisis brings.
